Historically, Tunisia has looked westward for its non-Arab tourists; first came the French, bolstered by a linguistic and (1) familiarity, then Brits, Spaniards, Italians, and Germans. But Western European travel warnings and (2) by big tour operators have forced Tunisia to shift its orientation. Tunisian tourism has been (3) by the Kremlin's decisions restricting travel to Egypt and Turkey, two (4) previously popular with sun-(5) Russians. Tunisia is adapting to the new Russians. It is now common to find menus in Cyrillic, and to see (6) of Russian tourists, sunburnt and in shorts, strolling up Avenue Bourguiba, the main thoroughfare in downtown Tunis.

France is the (1) (visit) country in the world with 85 million tourists spending time there last year. The country relies (2) (heavy) on its tourism industry and (3) (generate) more than 7 per cent of its gross domestic product from tourism, and over 13 per cent of that total in the Paris region alone. But the number of tourists visiting the region has gone down markedly since 130 people (4) (kill) in Paris in November 2015. The sector suffered another blow when a gunman (5) (drive) a truck into crowd celebrating Bastille Day in Nice, in July 2016, killing 85 people. Besides, strikes and floods (6) (recently / take) their toll on the French tourism industry.

PART TWO: WRITING TASKS (8pts)

Task One: Find and correct the five mistakes in the following paragraph: (5pts)

Thousands of people are flying to Turkey as part of their booming medical tourism industry, worth an annual $1bn. Last December, the country's ministry health said that over 200 hair transplants were carried on each day in Turkey, mostly on foreigner visitors. Drawn by geographical convenience and low prizes, most patients come from the Arab Gulf countries, Egypt and Libya. But increasing numbers are from Europe.
